Dear Hank (as you once suggested I call you) :-

I was not surprised at the excellent presentation you gave last night. I once overheard you talking about computers at the next table in the cafeteria. You were the first engineer talking in technical terms that I have understood, and I am married to one and the mother of another! In fact, I was tempted to get a crash course from you before the next visit of my daughter from Northern Telecom in Bramlea.

Your use of psychiatric terminology and then your explanations in layman's terms was excellent. When my anisokonia lessens either by removing the second cataracts or else my brain makes an adjustment to the double vision, particularly while reading, then I will ask to borrow your notes.

Again, congratulations

Martha.
